

Your Queries Answered

- Who may apply for the re-registration?

The child's natural parents if they are now husband and wife or civil partners.

- Can a step-father, adoptive father or anyone else sign as the child's father?

No,

- If one of the parents has died, can the birth be re-registered?

Yes, if the father's name was entered on the original birth record, or if there has been a legal ruling to who is the natural father.

- If the child has died, is it possible to re-register the birth?

Yes, only if the child was living at the time of the parents' marriage or civil partnership.

- Can I change my child's name?

If you have evidence that your child has used new forenames within 12 months of the original birth registration, then it may be possible to record the forenames. You may also be able to change your child's surname in some circumstances. Contact your local Register Office for advice

- Do you accept photographs of documents?

No. Any document provided must be the original or certified photocopy of an original document.

- How do I certify a document?

Your local Register Office may be able to photocopy your original document and certify this. Alternatively, if you search for 'certifying a document' on www.gov.uk this will give you further information on certifying documents

- Is there anything to pay?

There is no charge for the re-registration of the birth but the usual fee will be charged for any certificates issued.

- Does the natural father gain parental responsibility?

Parental responsibility is acquired automatically by the mother and by the natural father where he is married to or in civil partnership with the mother. Once parental responsibility is acquired only a court can remove it. If you require further information you may wish to seek legal advice.

FORM LA1
Part A

Application by the natural parents for the re-registration of their child's birth following the parents' marriage or civil partnership

What is the re-registration of a child's birth following the natural parents' marriage or civil partnership?

- Making a new record of your child's birth showing your child to be a child of your marriage or civil partnership, where your child was born in England or Wales.
- The new record is made at the register office for the district where your child was born (usually the register office which issued the original birth certificate).
- The new record may be made by one of you attending either the original register office or by making a declaration at another register office in England or Wales. (If you both live outside England and Wales or your marriage/civil partnership took place outside England and Wales you should submit your application to GRO Casework Team, General Register Office, PO Box 476, Southport PR8 2WJ.
- The new birth record replaces the original record and future birth certificates are issued from the new record.

How do we apply for the re-registration?

- Please complete Sections 1 to 8 (and Section 9 if applicable).
- Take or send the completed form to either the original Register Office where your child's birth was registered or a local Register Office in England or Wales, with these documents:-
 - your child's full birth certificate
 - your marriage / civil partnership certificate
 - any document asked for in Section 5, and
 - if the child or a parent is not living, the death certificate(s) if available.

If the registrar needs to refer your application to the General Register Office and you do not want to part with your original documents, you can ask at the register office whether your documents can be photocopied, in order for the copies to be sent to the General Register Office at the address below.

- Please also see "Your Queries Answered" at the back of this form.

Warning: Any person who deliberately gives false information for the registration of a birth may be prosecuted.
